The idea of the common core is fine, the implementation and excessive testing is wrong. The material is not age appropriate, contains mistakes, and more about corporations making money than helping students. I would rather see my child learn how to think creatively and problem solve, allow teachers to define material best for my child, and use tests for their intended purpose not to collect data so she can be a number used more to punish than help. Until these elements are fixed, and these ridiculous tests aren't tied to a teacher's APPR my child will never take a common core exam.
