

Dan Scholz, Parent

The Common Core standards themselves are not so much damaging as is the implementation of them. And tying teachers' performance and standing to the results of tests is unfair, unethical, and hurts everyone involved.....students, staff, families. I also question the influence of testing companies and private interests, and what this means for the institution of public education.