

Karen Steinig, Parent

Teachers should not be evaluated based on their students' standardized test scores. Some students cannot improve because of a myriad of factors outside the teacher's control; others cannot improve because their performance is already so High that there is no room to grow. In neither case should a teacher be penalized for this, or pressured to put undue emphasis on test prep. The things that make a great teacher are not so easily quantified.