

Lydia Clark, Parent

Common core testing does not reflect the true ability of a child. Not all children are going to college and making a one size fits all education is unfair. Not all students can pass these very strict, research based tasks on the regents examinations and it prevents lots of students (both special and regular Ed) from obtaining a college diploma. A certificate will not get anyone a job. Small children should not be crying over common core math problems which does not teach efficiency and accuracy. Using these scores for teacher evaluations is ridiculous. It only forces teachers to teach towards the test. Please get rid of common core and this one size fits all mentality.