

Rachel Cabezas, Parent

"I support the Common Core curriculum, particularly the emphasis on non-fiction reading. As the parent of an elementary-age son, before Common Core, there was minimal non-fiction reading in the classroom, or the local library, suitable for a young reader. This was of endless frustration to my son, since he preferred non-fiction reading (history, how things work, science). CC forced the school district (and the local library in conjunction with the school district) to consider the reading interests of boys like my son. Keep the Common Core"
