"Although I believe that teachers and students should be held accountable for their work - I'm honestly not sure the Common Core approach is the best way for educators and students to be held accountable. Teachers now have to take up so much time teaching for the test, that students really aren't "learning" and students are experiencing more stress than ever before. Teachers are still demanding large quantities of homework, reports and exams be fulfilled on top of the Standardized Tests to see if a teacher should retain his/her job. This should be the job of the school administration and not the NYS government."
