

Mary M Giuseppetti, Parent

As a parent and a pediatrician I find the current common core standards to be very developmentally inappropriate. It also is not well written. There are math questions sent home to my seven-year-old that I cannot figure out what they are asking. The math standards involve too much visual imagery and do not take into account that some children are auditory learners. The math standards are also too involved. He should not need to learn five different ways to add numbers. They also should not be timed in the first and second grade. Learning math should be about accuracy not speed.
