

Richard Grupka, Teacher, Lancaster

I think the common core is a good idea, and have no problems with the standards (other than a few which seem a little inappropriate for developmental level of students). I have a problem with this survey, as I think it will be used for more political purposes than educational. I can see responses being edited, and taken out of context to "Prove" teachers are "on-board" with all the testing and evaluation that has been linked to the common core, but isn't actually part of a common core. I have no reason to believe this survey has anything to do with genuine concern for students and their education. This survey is likely another politically motivated sham.
