

Brian Korb, Parent, Irvington Union Free Schools

I like the Common Core testing. It promotes a progressive learning technique and holds everyone accountable to reach certain achievement levels. At times it has been harder and frustrating, but I think it's worth the rewards of getting a more rigorous and accountable education. I understand the evolving global competitive landscape and for our long term benefit (our children and country) we need to keep up and stay ahead of other countries education to remain a world leader.

I only speak for myself (not my wife). But I am happy to engage in parent forums around this and be a supportive voice until someone can convince me otherwise.