

Chantelle Leone, Parent

"Common Core is a one-size-fits-all education policy that assumes every student learns exactly the same. A top down and centrally controlled standards will hurt students' creativity and learning. Good education policy realizes that all students have different learning styles, preferences, and paces. The federal government should not control education. Since education is not specifically listed in the Constitution, the authority over education should be left up to the states and the people. The solution is to get the federal government out of the education business"