

James Maloney, Parent

"NY State government has always been a haven for corrupt bureaucrats....its not surprising that NY State Board of Education can now be classified in the same category. Selling our students to big business and the federal government based on a teaching experiment. The implementation of common core was done with smoke and mirrors...why? Because it would have never been adapted any other way. It was ultimately designed, funded and backed by big business....why? When does big business ever support anything? When its good for there bottom line. When they see big bucks in it for them. Common Core is a nothing more than a way to make more money for these companies while putting up the front that it is ultimately good for our children. It makes me wonder why NY State Education Administrators would go along with such a blatant scheme? Oh yeah, because tax incentives were based on if and how well we implement it....really? We need to be black mailed into implementing something that is supposed to be so great for our children? If Common Core was the savior of our school districts it would have been properly vetted and implemented after districts had a chance to evaluate it...if it was so great it would be implemented because it works. Not because we are forced by government officials that have no clue what they are doing. Enough already with this experiment in education. NY State needs to stand up and stop this federal and big business nonsense. I have three children in public schools and I don't appreciate NY State selling them as an education experiment. STOP COMMON CORE RIGHT NOW!!!"