Jason Stang, Parent

I think it is ridiculous that teachers are being subjected to the State controlling curriculum and testing based on deals being made with companies who make the tests. Plus to evaluate teachers on test scores from these general state tests is a travesty and a joke.  The state needs to pull back its need for money and control and start to look at what is truly best for public education and students.  The common core also looks at education as a "one size fits all" scenario which is also extremely false.  Problems in the education system vary from city to city and suburb to suburb.